1. Since 1 Jul 54 a planning committee coordinated with the Communist Party under the auspices of the Academia Sinica has been organizing a new scientific institute to be located in Peking and to be called The Institute of Pathology and Experimental Medicine.
2. Its three primary projects will be: (1) studies directed toward the early diagnosis of cancer, particularly primary cancer prevailing in south and northwest China, (2) aviation research concerning the influence of high altitudes on functions of humans and animals and (3) biochemical research on the rationalization of manual work through the chemistry of muscular energy and the chemistry of nutrition. A portion of the biochemical research will be located in Soochow, most probably under the direction of Dr Lan-Sun Huang, who is now in Peking, working with the planning committee.
3. The institute will be staffed by groups of Chinese doctors who have returned to China during the past six months from courses of indoctrination and training in the USSR.
4. A likely prospect for the head of the Institute is Dr Wei Ling Kung formerly chief medical officer of the Chinese Eastern Railroad.
